US singing sensation supports local organisation, WetlandCare Australia

WetlandCare Australia (WCA), which has its national office in Ballina, has been very fortunate in obtaining support and sponsorship from singing legend Jack Johnson during his upcoming Australian tour.

The Jack Johnson tour is collaborating with hand-chosen local and national non-profits around the world in the realms of climate change, water quality, land preservation, environmental education, just to name a few. WCA has been the lucky recipient of 10 tickets to each of his Sydney, Brisbane and Wollongong shows, which they have been able to use as fundraising tools, and as encouragement to volunteers. Not only have they been able to raise funds for wetland projects, WCA hope to raise awareness throughout local communities by manning a stall in the 'Village Green' at three of Jack's shows. It is here that the not for profit organisations can showcase their great work and hopefully gain more support through new memberships. On top of this, the Johnson Ohana Charitable Foundation will match every dollar WCA is able to raise through donations made at the concert, or directly to WCA.

WetlandCare Australia is a national not for profit organisation, dedicated to achieving healthy wetlands for healthy communities.

So if you have been lucky enough to secure tickets to the Brisbane, Sydney or Wollongong shows keep a look out for WCA's stall and sign up your support to help a great cause.
